warships of the White Squadron lying in the broad Hudson, when Memorial Day dawned this morning.

Promise had been given that to-day's observances should be more impressive, more elaborate than those of any pre vious Memorial Day, and Dame Nature, who cried a year ago to-day and frowned dismally the year before, smiled benignly upon those in the metropolis who had set their hearts upon honoring the brave men who fell in battle for the reservation inviolate of the Union of States, and those others who came home from the awful strife to die in the ipeness of years by their own firesides. The distinguished foreign visitors to America, wherever they may be to-day, have been given an insight into another distinctive American institution, and those in New York, the Infanta Eulalia, Prince Antonio and Admiral Julio, of Spain; Admiral de Libran, of the visiting Italian fleet, and 500 Spanish and Italian sailors and marines, showed their appreciation of this American memorial celebration by participating many

It was a holiday. The whole atmosphere denoted it. Public offices and business houses were closed, and the streets were thronged with pretty girls in their "bost bib and tucker," stately matrons, men and boys, in holiday attire.

And it was astounding the quantity of flowers that were shown. Flowers are not so common in a great city, but there were none so poor but that they had obtained pretty blossoms for the day.
